SENATE-Sunfry bills were introduced and referred. The bill for the protection of fruit trees was taken up and discussion by Mosses Chittenden, Wilder, Everts. Ar strong, Olin, Nicholson, Davis French, Wilson, and Wilkins indicated that most of the speakers thought the bill was too broad, as it brings under its action becalless boys who chance t) gather nuts in the forests, and poor people who pick berries in bushy pastures, and that therefore it should be limited to vegetables and fruits in gardens and orchards. The bill was committed to Mr. Everts for amendment, was restricted

Wright of Castleton from the Commit and Means reported a bill providing for a statue of Ethan Allen, with an amendment, so that the state should be erected in the State House. The amendment was agreed to. Mr. Studdard of Townshend said the bill contemplated the perpetuity of the memory of a man whose name was familiar to all; of a man woo shunned no hardship to vindicate the independmany and his fearless courage defeated the invatons of the Northern British Army. We owe, said he. Ethan Allen a great debt; we owe to him, more than to any man, the sovereignty our State; we owe to him the organization of the State; we see to him primarily this very buildng and its decorations. Let us now so far as we an discharge this debt.

Ethan Alleu's efforts saved Vermont from the curse of slavery. His idea of liberty was wife apart from those who telerate that blighting evil. He rescued this state from the claims of New York, and vindicated its sovereignty and established freedom within its borders. The statue could be procured at a small price. The artist charged only for the more work. The measure commended itself to Vermont from the fact that the sculptor was a son of Vermont, that the material for the statue was to be taken from sire to perpetuate the memory of Ethan Allen,-Papers in other states have noticed this measure, consure if we refuse to erect the statue. He would said he. Toe model has been commended highly. There are Diese who have seen the man, and are Ing. William C. Bradley, who witnessed the marrings of Allen, promuneed the model a good one. Moreover, the farther we are removed from Allenand his extemporaries, the more difficult it becourse to get a good and life-like statue.
